Send a message to Legislative Council not to misrepresent the issues.

“The Legislative Council and its staff have made a serious mistake that will cloud the reputation of the Blue Book for years to come... The line [about allowing an adult to give ‘up to one ounce of marijuana to another individual 15 years of age or older as long as there is no compensation, although possession for those under 21 years of age would remain illegal’] was deliberately placed in the Blue Book... Unfortunately, the clear implication of that statement—that the amendment decriminalizes such transfers, at least insofar as the state is concerned—is simply false. It is a crime in Colorado to help any juvenile break any federal or state law, and under both federal and state law it will continue to be illegal for minors to possess marijuana even if Amendment 44 is approved. So someone giving a minor marijuana would be breaking the law as well. ...[T]he result [of the Blue Book] is that voters will be misled. And that’s simply not right, whatever your opinion of the merits of Amendment 44.”

What’s the answer? A letter to the Sept. 21 Rocky Mountain News offers a great idea: “When voters receive the guides, they should write on them or include a note about the intentionally misleading language in the arguments against Amendment 44 and send them back to

The Legislative Council, Room 029, State Capitol Building, Denver, CO, 80203.”
